The Trinity is a model for how we live, how we love, how we change the world

When we hear the dogma of "three persons in one God," we forget that God didn't appear to the participants of the Council of Nicea in 325 and proclaim this precise formula. That concept had been fermenting in the consciousness of Christians for almost 300 years. They had not read those words in a catechism and repeated them on the council floor. Had our faith ancestors been content to repeat only "catechism concepts" of God, we would not be celebrating today's feast of the Trinity. No, our ancestors in faith 1700 years ago simply had experienced God working in their lives on those three different levels. One way to put their experience into a simple phrase is to say: Our God is a social God.

On the mountain, Moses (Exodus 34:4b-6, 8-9) finds a God with whom he can communicate in some way. He asks this God to journey with all the people. Again and again, we discover a God of relationship in the scriptures. God is more than totally other. We discover a God traveling with us and with the whole community. Our God is a social God – a God who is concerned with our world and its people.

2 Corinthians 13:11-13 reminds us that the relationship within God also mirrors the relationship that should exist within us as a human community: mutuality and support, love and respect. Paul first gives God the title of "God of love and peace," then applies different attributes to the Father, Son and Spirit: "The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ and the love of God and the fellowship of the Spirit be with all of you." These are individual dimensions of God which the risen Jesus brings to the surface in his followers' lives, they are parts of God's personality which Jesus helps us discover.

Jesus reminds us in John 3:15-18 that God travels with us not to condemn but to love – to be of help to all of us. As God is a social being, so we are. Any good theology of God has social implications. It calls us to social values. Our religious faith involves a community of mutual support and discovery, and a set of values that we share. We are concerned with the issues of the world and everyday life, with justice and peace. We focus on the common good. We see God in all people and in all of creation. We have a special concern for the poor. We have hope in the midst of all the problems and challenges of the world.

As Christians, we reject any spirituality that disconnects us from these concerns for the world. In this way the Trinity is a model for how we live, how we love, and how we change the world.
