Gestures of Love

Just imagine that the scene in the Gospel would happen today after Mass in the hall. As we are sipping our coffee, a woman whose dresses and make-up clearly show how she earns her living, walks in, embraces the priest with tears in her eyes and kisses his feet. The community would be deeply scandalized; all kinds of rumors would begin to go round. As priest I would be deeply embarrassed and turn red in the face with shame and anger. How does Jesus react? He allows the woman to express her love in her own way. What an extraordinary sovereign inner freedom undisturbed by what the law says or what people might think.

Can we receive such gestures of gratuitous love and affection from others, from God? Yet, this is the core of the good news: that God loves us first before we have done anything, and God keeps loving and forgiving us if even we chose not to pay any attention to Him and live our lives without Him. In fact we are unable to love others if we have not made the experience of being loved in the first place. Children who do not get enough love often are unable to give love.

The readings illustrate the point with the story of two people who make the experience of being loved and forgiven. King David could not resist the attraction of a beautiful woman. To get her he arranges to have her husband killed. The prophet Nathan tells him God's judgment: David will die. The talion law: a life for a life. But then God forgives him, He gives David back his life, and for the rest of his life David will sing God's merciful love in the psalms which we still pray today.

The woman in the Gospel has been used and abused by men and treated as dirt. In Jesus she meets a man who treats her with respect and makes her realize that God still loves her and forgives her. She is so overwhelmed that she expresses her gratitude with a crazy gesture.

How much love is there in our lives? Are we still creative enough to show others signs of our appreciation? They need not be the wild dramatic outburst of the woman in the Gospel. They can be little gestures, small surprises, gratuitous gifts that keep a relationship alive and feed a friendship. And it is the occasional spontaneous prayer and the small sacrifice that keep our relationship to God on fire.
