We often meet God in human encounters

In the gospel, we find two women, overwhelmed with joy, sharing their happiness. Mary and Elisabeth, both pregnant under unusual circumstances, were uncertain about the future of their children and families. Both were probably misunderstood by them but Mary and Elisabeth found comfort in understanding each other and understood that God was working in their lives. They knew that they were blessed in a very special way. – With whom could they share this faith experience? It is not easy to find someone with whom one can share one's faith. Often, people who are closest to us – such as our partners, parents, children, good friends - have no antenna for faith experiences so it is difficult to speak to them about it. We all experience encounters where we can discuss anything, but very rarely our faith. We need someone who listens and understands and is ready to take care of this experience and often entrusts us with his or her own experiences.

The Pastoral Constitution of the Second Vatican Council Gaudium et spes (Joy and hope), says: „The joy and hope, the grief and anguish of the men and women of our time, especially of those who are poor or afflicted in any way, are the joy and hope, the grief and anguish of the followers of Christ as well. Nothing that is genuinely human fails to find echo in their hearts.” The pastoral constitution gave directions and directives for the Church service in today's world. Vatican II took place 50 years ago. Did we put into practice what the council wanted to initiate? Are we, “followers of Christ”, open to the faith experiences of our fellow human beings? Do we offer spaces where one can speak about these experiences without being ridiculed? One thing is clear: when people share their lives, speak about their most intimate experiences, God is present. In a congregation where we share joy and hope, grief and anguish we can encounter God.

The reason why we address this issue at Christmas is that Christmas has become an ambiguous feast. On one hand, it is commercialized: the feelings, motives, mood and spirit of Christmas are exploited. On the other hand, this feast appeals to so many people: it expresses our longing for encounters, security and coziness that we are not able to offer each other. Christmas can fulfill this longing if we return to its original meaning and allow for closeness between people and look for and offer genuine encounters. This is what we can learn from Mary and Elisabeth: they share their joy and thank and praise God for everything they received from Him. Sharing our joy, thanking God and praising God for everything we have received – this is what we are invited to do. In this way we may receive the biggest and best Christmas present – one we cannot buy at any Christmas market: our thankfulness and joy about a God who is present in our world, in our lives, and keeps granting us his blessings.
