Third Sunday of Lent

Exodus 20:1-17; Psalm 18; 1Corinthians 1:22-25; John 2:13-25

In our first reading today, we are presented with the Ten Commandments – the most basic law for moral living. It is a reminder in this season of Lent of the basic commands we should refer to when reviewing our life and to consider that these might be the summary or checklist that the Lord himself might use when we come before his throne and seek admittance to his Kingdom. The Psalm tells us that ‘the law of the Lord is perfect, it revives the soul’.

In the second reading St Paul tells the Corinthians that while others may scoff at the notion of a crucified Christ, they, as Christians, know that Jesus Christ is the wisdom of God and that, following his law, they too will enter into the Father's glory. Paul reminds the reader that God acts and judges in ways that are different to human ways and that they must think differently when it comes to God. The Jews refused to believe in Jesus because they could not reconcile a weak Messiah dying in this fashion. The Greeks rejected the crucified Christ because it went against their rationalism – God could not be killed by humans and would not die for them. But as Christians we must see with God's eyes and understand that Jesus is the Christ who brings us salvation through his death and resurrection.

In the gospel, we see Jesus driving the money changers out of the Temple because they have profaned the building and have not given it its due respect as the house of God, the one building where God dwelt among his people. In the questioning after this, Jesus predicts his own death and resurrection which his questioners did not fully understand, and which the apostles only understood after his resurrection had occurred. There is also a shift in this episode: the great Temple, which was built as the house of God in Jerusalem, is no longer to be his house where he dwells on earth, but his Son is the new temple and so God can be worshipped anywhere rather than in one specific building in one city. Through Jesus Christ's death and resurrection, we are given the supreme example of love: the love of God the Son who died that we might have life. In the light of this we are challenged to really look at our lives in the light of the Ten Commandments – which are very short indeed – and to live by them in order to win the glory promised us.
